All these were is as anxious her husband and every one else beraided as to be the result of the planetary opposition of the year 1881. How eagerly those

French Toilets. WHY FRENCH WOMAN ARE THE NEATEST IN THE

On our way writes the French correspondent of an American paper, we indulged in a brown above every other nation in the matter of the toilet. It is not because they are extravagant in the choice of materials as a people. I herefore we have come to the conclusion that the secret of their success lies in these two points: taste in selection and extreme attention to those niceties other nations consider unimportant. Then, too, a thorough Parisiun lady is so excessively carefol of her wardrobe. She bestows on it nearly as much care as on her cuildren. One who can afford to buy only two or three costumes in the year will make as good an appearance as an American who runs through half a dozen. The French woman's bonnet may be simple and chesp, but never out of keeping with the rest of her toilet, and, however she manages in the matter of dresses, shabby boots are never reckoned among her shortcomings. The gloves may be be of an inferior quality, but they fit well, and perer lack a button Notwithstanding its miserable attempt and color of her costome may be trying, but she so ofter failure as a bit of rhyme, all the events lightens it with bunches of lace and pieces of foretold in the doggered except the last have been verified. Perhaps to that fact and the near approach of "the terrible year 1881," owes its vitality and present prominence, although the publisher of the Shipton almenac has openly confessed that he added the two last lines to give the book a large sale. Two or three weeks ago as good as new when next to be worn. One sees no a obequitous cart was seen in different parts of dresses on the streets of Paris. That filthysweeping our city, in which sat a man bearing a buge pla epectacle of petricost and pavement sweeping is card. Upon it was painted various zodiacal reserved for our own sublime American cities. French women have been reproached with antidiness in their homes. "Yes," says Mrs. Grandy "they live for the world." Perhaps the reproach corner a small pamphlet entitled "The Voice of the Stars;" a grim thing, written by a Professor Grimmer, and containing the grimmest predictions of terrible storms, earthquakes, volcanic eroptions, famme, piagoes, and general desolation that the imagination of a description of the professor in matters of dress that helped to win that the imagination of a description of the professor in matters of dress that helped to win the professor in the professor of the professor in the professor of the pr

One of the best accentists, deepest thinkers, and closest reasoners upon this coast is Prof.

Mr. Lockwood's Grievance.

During the last trip I took over the Pacific Raifroad I noticed that after we left Omaha the man in the seat in front of me appeared to have something on his mind. He would scowl dreadfully for a moment, then he would gaze with a far away look out of the window. Then he would draw a huge bowie-knife from his coat pocket, and after strapping it on his boot, he would ron his themic along the edge. After scowling a few minutes more he would take out a revolver, examine the chambers to assure him-I were triends, and when I got marr to him, and he asked me out to the wedding. "Did you go?" "No; but I sent him another we ever could come near its joy.

Above all this mosaic of loveliness of color. I wrote to him and asked him if he didn't think but to reappear as an ivery unted background matrimony, particularly as he had everything for the brilliant stars.
